Photographs Show Files in Amber. When the smacks reached Lowestoft recently one of the fishermen brought with him a unique piece of amber which he had found in his net, says a London newspaper. He sent it to London and sold it for £27 10s. It is a huge pebble, resembling in shape an oblong potato, and it weighs within half an ounce of two pounds the finest specimen of amber which has been found on the English coast in many years. On the subject of amber it may be mentioned that a Streatham gentleman has at last succeeded in photographing flies in amber. Amber shows dead black on a photograph and under the microscope. He has discovered a fluid into which he puts the amber and then photographs through it. As some of the flies in amber are of a forgotten type.

dating back to before the flood, the results are interesting. The Mammoth Cave's War Supplies It has been averred that but for the saltpeter furnished by the Mammoth cave of Kentucky and by some smaller limestone caverns the United States would have been unable successfully to wage the war of 1812. Even during the civil war these cave supplies of saltpeter were largely utilized for making gunpowder. Recently the question of the origin of cave saltpeter has been discussed anew in the Journal of Geology, and W. H. Hess, dissenting from the view that the saltpeter deposits are due to the formation of guano by bats, holds that they have originated from the evaporation of water which, as it percolated through the roof of the cavern, absorbed nitrates from the Winter Dress of Chinese.
